Meetings Held and Plans Formulated in the Club World.

HONOR MRS. GEORGE BASS

Mrs. Wesley Martin Stoner Is Toastmistress at Monday Dinner.

Members of the various women's Democratic clubs of the city met at a dinner given by them Monday evening at the Lafayette, in honor of Mrs. George Bass, of Chicago, chairman of the National Woman's Bureau.

Mrs. Wesley Martin Stoner, a prominent member of the civic division of the inaugural committee, and nationally prominent suffrage worker, was toastmistress. Among the speakers were Assistant Secretary of Labor Louis F. Post, Senator William D. Phillips, Senator Hollis, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carl Vrooman, Congressman Baker, E. Hilton Jackson, Charles Korbly, Mrs. Walter McNab Miller, Mrs. W. L. Thomas, and Mrs. Ella Plante Young.

General praise was given President Wilson's peace message to the Senate. Child labor and the influence exerted by the suffrage states in the reappointment of Miss Julia Lathrop, formed the subject of another address.

Speakers Recognize Work.
The executive ability displayed by Mrs. Bass in directing her forces, although chosen late in the campaign, and the important bearing which her work had on the election, were recognized by many of the speakers. Senator Hollis gave a humorous account of the days when he and Mrs. Bass were fighting together in the trenches in Chicago, when sometimes the resources of the regiment were reduced to 40, which they took turns in carrying, with extreme care to avoid breakage.

E. Hilton Jackson referred to his birthplace in the State where Democracy was born, and declared himself a firm believer in the doctrine that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, which powers, the speaker pointed out, were not so derived in the District of Columbia.

Will Maintain Attitude.
Mrs. Walter McNab Miller, first vice president of the National Suffrage Association, emphasized the non-sectarian character of that organization, which attitude she declared would be maintained until the vote was won.

Letters of regret were read from Senator James K. Vardaman, of Mississippi, Senator James D. Phelan of California, Senator Ollie James of Kentucky, Vance McCormick of Pennsylvania, and many others.

Tables Are Sold.
Tables were sold to the various patronesses of the woman's division of the inaugural committee at a bridge party held Monday afternoon at the Oxford Hotel for the purpose of furnishing and maintaining the new headquarters there. The hostesses were Mrs. Alfred H. Marsh, Mrs. Kate Morris, Mrs. James H. Dodge, Mrs. Mary C. Ryan, Mrs. Leah Abram and Miss Nora Huffman.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association, and Mrs. Arthur P. Dodge, president of the Association Opposed to Suffrage, have both received invitations to take part in the work of the woman's division of the inaugural committee.

Mrs. Thomas Walsh, wife of the Senator from Montana, has been appointed chairman of the Washington section of the woman's division.

Joint Meeting Is Held.
Under the leadership of Mrs. Wesley Martin Stoner, an active member of the inaugural committee, a joint meeting of the Federal Labor Union, No. 12776, of the Bureau of Engraving, and Local No. 42 of the Woman's Bindery Union, of the Government Printing Office, was held in the white parlor of the New Ebbitt to arrange plans for the inaugural parade.

The speakers were Mrs. W. L. Thomas, of Chicago, executive secretary of the National Woman's Peace Party; Mrs. Walter Martin Stoner, of the Woman's Single Tax Club; Miss Laura J. Graddick, delegate from the Bindery Union to the District Federation, and the hostess, Mrs. Wesley Martin Stoner.

Woman's Benefit Association.

The membership contest held by Georgetown Review, No. 10, of the Woman's Benefit Association, resulting in the addition of thirty-one new names to their list, culminated in a banquet held over the Wisconsin avenue bank last Monday evening, following a short business meeting.

Mrs. Beylder, captain of the winning side, occupied the seat of honor at one end of the table, while Mrs. Tom Smith, captain of the losing side, and banquet hostess, presided at the opposite end. A great red basket with many white hearts, heralding the Valentine season, was the centerpiece, and miniature red baskets bearing the names of the guests on a white heart, were the place cards. A touch of black completed the Macabre colors of black, red, and white.

Captains Receive Tokens.
Each of the captains received a gold bee pin as a token of appreciation from the members. The guards were assisted by Mrs. Mary C. Adamson, Mrs. Mabel T. La Rue and Mrs. A. M. Welch were guests.

This was another of the celebrations for which Georgetown has a reputation since Mrs. Mary Killen has been their leader.

POPULAR MEDICINE BY DR. HIRSHBERG

Intelligent Observation of Rules of Hygiene Will Decrease Illness.

By Dr. LEONARD K. HIRSHBERG.

There's a little bit of music in every tuneless mortal. There is such sweet compulsion in music Saul was charmed out of his blue funk by David's lyre. Today a certain well known surgeon performs his operations to the strains of beautiful melodies.

There's a reason that a few people may have no music in their souls, for a tone-deaf ear is more often due to a neglect of discipline, instruction, training, and stimulation. If the parents, adults, and others around the child give forth no sweet sounds, if the infant and growing youngster hears no old-fashioned melodies, songs, or orchestration or instrumental solos, it is no more to be expected that such a child will know or love music than a blind child could appreciate a sunset.

Prof. Edward Maryon, of Montclair, N. J., has devised a method whereby this hidden, dormant perception of musical pitch and color vision can be applied toward the development of a "musical sense."

Prof. Maryon's method shows you how to obtain and retain absolute pitch by means of your memory for colors. Color vision is the keynote of the plan of instruction which is intended to make children and grown-ups sing in absolute correct pitch at sight.

Founded in Motion.

Color sense is no more a gift of heredity than is tone sense. The one is born as dormant in man as is the other. It is merely the accidental availability and universal extension of various light vibrations in the environment of infants and children, which so early, quickly and completely arouses the latent perceptions of color "in the human units," as Professor Maryon calls mankind.

The sources of both tones and colors, sound and light are vibrations or movements. At bottom they are the same—merely motion. They differ only in the mediums through which each passes to the eye or the ear; the universalities of occurrence of the one—light—as contrasted with the comparative rarity of the other—sound—and the speed and power of each.

Light is the movement or vibration that are aware of and penetrable to many more things. It is particles sent through the thinnest matter, called "ether." They enter and stir the eye almost the instant after birth in a variety of speeds or "colors."

Practice Is Needed.

Sound is the result of similar vibrations in denser matter, such as air, water, wood, bone, drumheads, strings, brass and metal. They reach the ear and are perceived as a cry, a noise, a tone or a symphony in one pitch or many pitches. The babe, the child or the adult may never be placed in surroundings where tones and pitches are various and beautiful. The upshot of this will be an auditory life of tone-deafness or monotony in several senses of this word.

Prof. Maryon says that by his method "the native ability to perceive and memorize pitch and tone, while not as easily stored and brought forth as color, can be cultivated and made to be read by lifting it from potentiality into actuality."

Briefly, you must be made to think pitch, just as you must think red. Thanks to Sir William Crookes, the great English scientist, who invented the Crookes tube, which led Roentgen to discover the x-rays, it has now been known for four years that color and tone go together.

Four years ago Prof. Crookes measured tones and colors simultaneously vibrations of light and sound. He found that you can think of "C" in the exact pitch when you picture red mentally. "If you see violet you can with a little practice sing B."

With a proper amount of discipline, experience, training and practice with the ear, by this association with the mind's eye, can be easily and quickly taught pitch and tone. It is a translation of mental colors into outwardly expressed, muscular instrumentalization of productive tones.

TO GIVE SPECIAL MUSIC.
The choir of Rhode Island Avenue M. P. Church, Rhode Island Avenue and First street northwest, under direction of Henry Gilligan, organist, will give the first of the special musical services, to be held on the last Sunday night of each month, tomorrow night.

The choir recently formed, is a voluntary organization of twenty-four voices.

WOMEN URGED TO BROADEN ABILITIES

Working for One Employer and at One Task for Too Long Space Discouraged.

Are you drifting in a rut in your work? Are you working without a plan? If so, what do you suppose you would do if you should lose your position? If the firm should fail? How many hooks have you out for "fish," or other positions in commercial waters?

Are you standing still or advancing? If you find yourself at the galling brink of failure, on the abyss of poverty after asking yourself these inquiries, working women, do not quite despair.

There is still time to write to the League for Business Opportunities for Women, 242 Lexington avenue, New York.

Question Will Be Taken Up.

There your exact question will be taken up and worked out for you. The point in your case, which is the vital spot of trouble, will be pointed out and methods for its cure suggested.

How this league began has been told of before, but that a monthly bulletin has been published by them is comparatively little known.

In December the first number of the first volume of the Bulletin was printed. And what was said in one editorial in that number about women who work too long in one position without getting anything but a mere living or salary out of it is too good to lose.

How Letters Are Handled.

So in order to demonstrate to other women how the Bulletin handles letters asking questions and to give the benefit of the canny advice at the same time herewith follows the editorial:

The letter, together with a concise answer as to the actual steps to take toward obtaining another position suitable to the abilities of the writer, was printed in the department known as the Vocational Counsel. In the front of the little pamphlet on the whole matter was as follows. It was called, very appropriately:

Adrift.

"In another place in the Bulletin we published a letter from a business woman asking our advice, her problem being that, after nearly ten years of service as secretary to one man she suddenly finds herself without a job, not because of any shortcoming in her work, but because the financial profligacy have fallen from under her employer. Having concentrated so entirely on her work in one office and for one employer she finds herself now almost in the position of a beginner, with a limited circle of business acquaintances, timid in making new connections, with little knowledge of how to capitalize her past experience and her difficulties increased through the competition of younger women who are willing to take smaller salaries than that to which she has been accustomed."

Typical Experiences.

"The letter is one every fledgling in the business world should emblazon before her, so typical is it of the experience of innumerable women workers. If the position in which our respondent finds herself were the result of careless, inconsequential work the case would hardly be worth a second thought, but one can read between the lines a hint of the conscientious service she has given, of the faithfulness which has made her invaluable to her employer during ten years, and has held her to the ship through two perilous years when it threatened to founder."

"Her experience, she writes, demonstrates to her that it is not wise to stick to one line of business too long; unless you have an interest in the work, the wonder is that one can stick to one line of business through ten years without having an interest in it so vital that she garners every scrap of knowledge there is to learn from it, without applying herself to a variety of new needs, widening her horizon so that at the end of that time she is armed with experience and confidence to tackle fearlessly new work along the same line."

Eye to Outward Limits.

"Is there a man of any glimmer of initiative who would work steadily through years without some plan for the future, who would be willing to narrow the horizon of his business life to dependence upon one individual? If women are to escape the perils of founding in business they must work with a plan from the very day they enter an office, must look upon their service to their employer as a means of individual growth and development, with an eye always to outgrowing the limits of their immediate job, to enlarging their scope and usefulness."

"The writer of the letter referred to was in a financial office where the contacts are varied and the opportunities innumerable. She became so valuable as a secretary that she was earning $35 a week, but in the most uncertain of all branches of business she worked with a blind faith that the morrow would be as safe as today, she concentrated on her service to one individual, made no effort apparently to broaden her circle of acquaintances, to keep alert to the opportunities that other women were developing in the financial world."

"From secretaries to financiers, women are graduating every day into bond saleswomen, into financial statisticians, into managers of departments for women in brokerage offices and banks.

"But even if she had not fitted herself for one of these specialized fields, a judicious mingling with people, keeping abreast of the new developments in the financial world and a constant extending of her usefulness through study and watchfulness of new needs in the office, would be obliged to increase rather than lessen her opportunities for another position in a crisis such as has come to her. With something saved against the hour of emergency and armed with the fearlessness that comes through an active, acquisitive mind, she might start all over again at a smaller salary without considering it such a great calamity and would be sure in short while to work back to her former status of usefulness and compensation."

"It is the plainness, the complete yielding of her gifts to one individual, the concentration on the immediate task before her that is the tragedy of this woman worker and her kind. The plodder of her situation does not lessen her folly as an individual and as a worker. There must inevitably come a day when her ship threatens to founder, when she is called upon to steer it herself and finds her knowledge of navigation too limited through having served so long in the hold."
